

I'm Sarah Chen, born on March 15, 1992. You can reach me at sarahc.designs@email.com or (555) 123-4567. I'm currently based in Toronto, Canada, though I was born in Vancouver and spent a few years in Hong Kong as a kid. Being Chinese-Canadian, I'm fluent in English, Mandarin, and Cantonese.

On the health front, I manage mild asthma and have some dairy sensitivity – nothing too serious though! I'm trying to build up my stamina with regular workouts, aiming to run a half-marathon next spring. Usually get around 7 hours of sleep, though I'm working on making that a solid 8.

Professionally, I work as a UX/UI designer in the tech sector. Currently at a fintech startup where I've been for the last 2 years. My strongest skills are in Figma, user research, and prototyping. I also do some front-end development with React when needed.

Outside of work, I'm pretty active in the local photography scene and run a small food blog featuring Asian fusion recipes. Love experimenting with combining traditional Chinese dishes with Canadian ingredients. Recently got into indoor rock climbing too – it's become my favorite way to destress after work!

Food-wise, I'm a huge fan of spicy Sichuan cuisine, though I can cook pretty much anything from dumplings to pasta. Currently trying to perfect my sourdough bread game. But I'm allergic to shellfish which absolutely sucks because I secretly think I am a seafood girl!

For the next few years, I'm focusing on growing my design skills, particularly in design systems and accessibility. Also hoping to take a sabbatical in 2025 to travel through Southeast Asia and work on my photography portfolio. Maybe even write that cookbook I've been dreaming about!
